

The Daily Three Execution Template

A minimalist system designed to eliminate noise, reduce cognitive friction, and drive daily completion.

Most daily planners fail because they encourage endless list-making rather than focused execution. By narrowing your daily output to three core priorities, you eliminate decision fatigue and direct your energy toward what actually moves the needle. Use this single-page framework every morning to plan your day in under five minutes.

1. The Morning Brain Dump

Before selecting your priorities, clear your mental RAM. Write down every single task, idea, email, and errand currently bouncing around in your head.

This prevents open loops from draining your focus throughout the day. Once everything is on paper, you can evaluate it objectively.

- Set a timer for 3 minutes and write down every pending obligation.
- Include work tasks, personal errands, and lingering commitments.
- Do not organize the list yet; just get it out of your head.

2. The Top Three Priorities (The Big 3)

Review your brain dump and select the three items that will have the highest positive impact on your goals today. Everything else is secondary.

If you accomplish only these three things today, the day is an absolute success. If you do twenty other minor tasks but miss these three, the day is a failure.

- Priority 1: The single most important needle-moving task.
- Priority 2: A secondary high-impact project or responsibility.
- Priority 3: A crucial maintenance task, administrative item, or personal well-being action.

3. Friction Reduction & Setup

Decision fatigue kills momentum before work even begins. Prepare your workspace and define the exact starting conditions for your first priority the night before or first thing in the morning.

Remove digital and physical distractions from your immediate field of vision to protect your attention span.

- Close all browser tabs except the exact tool needed for Priority 1.
- Put your phone in another room or set it to 'Do Not Disturb' face down.
- Write down the very first physical action step for Priority 1 to eliminate hesitation.

4. Time-Blocking & Execution Windows

Vague intentions lead to procrastination. Assign realistic execution blocks to your Big 3 to create a sense of healthy urgency.

Protect these blocks fiercely. Treat them like non-negotiable appointments with yourself or a client.

- Block 90 minutes of uninterrupted deep work for Priority 1 during your peak energy hours.
- Schedule a 45-minute block for Priority 2.
- Allocate a strict 30-minute window for Priority 3 and general administrative catch-up.

5. End-of-Day Review

Close the loop on your day with a quick two-minute audit. This builds self-awareness and informs how you plan tomorrow.

Do not judge yourself for unfinished items; simply assess why they stalled and adjust accordingly.

- Mark each of the Big 3 as complete, carried over, or dropped.
- Note any unexpected friction points that slowed you down.
- Select tomorrow's Priority 1 before closing your workspace.

Print or copy this layout onto a single blank sheet of paper each morning. Keep it directly in front of you and ignore everything else until your Daily Three are complete.
